Sensors pick up 'signs of life'

A member of the Malaysian search and rescue team listens for signs of life.

Sounds described by an official as "signs of life" have been detected by rescuers using high-tech equipment at the site of a Philippine school buried by last week's mudslide. Rosette Leriaas, governor of Southern Leyte province, said Monday that sound-detection gear and seismic sensors brought in by U.S. and Malaysian forces had picked up sounds of scratching and banging.
